

The semi-annual summit brings together about 150 people from across North Carolina and beyond to discuss and plan what actions will prevent first-time sexual harm. The focus this year will be finding ways to have clear, practical and visionary conversations about increasing factors that can prevent sexual violence from happening. These factors can include building personal skills and making changes in communities and institutions that reduce the risk of sexual violence. Please visit www.NCCASA.org for more information.